Attorney Paul J. Lysobey provides strategic business counsel in regulatory compliance, data privacy, and commercial transactions for closely held businesses.

PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

As a member of the Business Services legal practice at Wegman Hessler, business attorney Paul J. Lysobey supports companies and organizations with their legal needs, including contract agreements, regulatory requirements and business transactions. Paul also has experience in legal matters related to data privacy.

Paul's corporate and business law practice includes drafting and negotiating commercial contracts, and advising on business operations, licensing requirements, and corporate governance matters. His experience encompasses acquisitions and divestitures, commercial financing arrangements, and the regulatory aspects of business transactions.

Prior to joining Wegman Hessler in December 2025, Paul practiced at a law firm in the Cleveland area, where he gained significant experience related to consumer financial services regulatory compliance and commercial transactions. His background enables him to provide practical, business-oriented counsel on the intersection of regulatory requirements and operational strategy.

Paul has authored and presented on business law topics, with publications appearing in the American Bar Association's The Business Lawyer and Business Law Today. His articles address developments in data privacy, regulatory compliance, and emerging legal requirements affecting business operations. He has presented at industry conferences on federal and state privacy law updates, regulatory trends, and risk management strategies for businesses.
